

THOMSON REUTERS Case Notebook

As a legal professional, it's important to be well prepared for a case. This means organizing and analyzing unprecedented amounts of case documents, a paper-heavy process. But sorting through countless three-ring binders of paper slows you down and puts you at a disadvantage.

Efficiency

Poring over an endless array of case documents is the norm for lawyers. Every detail of every document needs to be carefully considered, in order to isolate that one piece of key evidence that can help win your case.

However, with cases becoming increasingly document intensive, it's challenging to be efficient in this process.
